court system by replacing paper-based court files with an electronic information environment. Through eCourtMN, court documents will be filed and served electronically, while judges and court staff will be given new tools to review, sign, and process court documents on their computers. The electronic delivery and transfer of court documents will produce considerable efficiencies in court operations and faster results for court customers. In addition, the eCourtMN Initiative will increase access to court information for the public and government agencies.

The eCourtMN Initiative began in 2011, and is being completed in four phases, each lasting approximately one year. The Minnesota Judicial Branch has completed the first two phases of the initiative, including an 11-county pilot project where electronic filing and service of court documents was tested and refined. The Branch is currently testing the electronic tools that judges and court staff will use in the courthouse, and will begin the process of expanding electronic filing and service of court documents to the rest of Minnesota's 87 counties next year.

New Policy Ensures Electronic Device Use in Court Facilities for Litigants

The Minnesota Judicial Council has promulgated a new policy “Electronic Devices in Courtrooms and Hearing Rooms” that was effective on October 1, 2014. The purpose of the policy is to ensure that attorneys and self-represented litigants are permitted to use electronic devices in courtrooms and hearing rooms to assist with calendar issues and other case processing matters. In addition, the Council instructed each judicial district to promulgate a local policy addressing the use of electronic devices by other court participants and by court visitors.

The First Judicial District already has such a policy, which defines a “court facility” as the entire portion of a building used for court operations (courtrooms, court administration offices, other locations used for court functions, and any adjacent common areas). With the exception of cell phones, electronic tablets, and laptop computers, any device capable of taking photos or recording video and audio is not permitted in a First District court facility except as provided by court rule.

However, these devices can be used in common areas (waiting areas and jury assembly rooms) for very limited purposes and in “silent” mode only.

In order to enforce this First District policy, law enforcement and court personnel are authorized to search persons and inspect electronic devices in a court facility. If evidence is found that they have been used in a manner not in compliance with the policy, the device may be seized and the individual violating the policy may be held in contempt of court.

The First District policy is located on our public website under Administrative Orders and Policies.

Rules Committees Confronting eFiling and eService Challenges

Seven rules advisory committees are currently working on proposed amendments to Minnesota’s procedural court rules to achieve a smooth transition to mandatory electric filing (eFiling) and service (eService). The Minnesota Supreme Court reconstituted the committees in July, and each committee’s set of proposed amendments is due to the Court by December 31, 2014.

eFiling and eService is currently only mandated for attorneys and government agencies in specified civil and family case types in the 11 eCourtMN pilot counties (Cass, Clay, Cook, Dakota, Faribault, Hennepin, Kandiyohi, Lake, Morrison, Ramsey and Washington). The eCourtMN Steering Committee, however, recently voted to expand the mandate to include all case types, and it is expected to go into effect July 1, 2015, in the 11 pilot counties. The mandate will eventually expand statewide following a period of voluntary eFiling and eService in Minnesota’s remaining 76 counties.

The advisory committee members include judges, lawyers, court administrators, and other legal professionals from across Minnesota. With the assistance of the State Court Administrator’s Office, each committee will prepare proposed rule amendments for the Supreme Court’s consideration. The committees will draw on the experience of court personnel, attorneys, and other individuals familiar with using the eFiling and eService system in the eCourtMN pilot counties. They will also review the electronic filing rules of other states and the federal courts for additional perspectives on the issues.

The committees have tentatively scheduled a total of 32 meetings at the Minnesota Judicial Center in St. Paul.
