Introduction

The tables below list the case group and case category filters for reporting. There are seven case groups, each representing broad areas of law. Under each case group are more specific case categories. Each case category includes case types that are similar legally and take a similar amount of time for the court to resolve. For criminal case groups, the tables below list all of the case categories and examples of the offense descriptions and statutes within each category. For the non-criminal case groups, the tables list all of the case categories and the respective case type descriptions. For additional information on non-criminal case types, please refer to the Civil Case Type Index \(www.mncourts.gov\).

Juvenile Delinquency/Juvenile Protection

Juvenile Protection, or Children in Need of Protection or Services (CHIPS), actions are court cases that involve the health, safety, and welfare of children. Children can be considered CHIPS because they are abused or neglected, truant, runaway, or otherwise need protection or services.

Juvenile Delinquency actions are court cases that allege felony, gross misdemeanor, misdemeanor, and petty misdemeanor offenses committed by a minor. Case category assignment to an offense level is based upon the highest charge on the case. A juvenile traffic offender is any child alleged to have committed a traffic offense, except children under the jurisdiction of adult court as provided in Minn. Stat. § 260B.225.
